Focus on #PhD

How to survive your PhD? A lesson from who made it.

Our thought process change when we made a mistake.

What we think is right or acceptable becomes incorrect when we make a mistake and we learn a new and better way of completing a task.

This is a part of what doing a PhD is about. Learning how to face the failure, that in research is an everyday friend.

One of the difficulties of a PhD student is to join the pieces. Sometimes you find yourself with data and results, significant or not, and the biggest effort is to see the bigger picture, to find the right connections.

How do you do it? How do you overcome that moment? What tools?

Our course proposal is very simple: listen to stories.

We want to involve Junior Post-doc and PI, and ask them to tell us about their research experience, their moment that seemed insurmountable.
